SEO Strategy Report Intro

Most people looking for a lawyer start with a Google search. When someone searches for a criminal defense attorney, they are usually dealing with a serious situation and want answers quickly. They are not searching in general terms. Instead, they search very specific things like the charge they are facing, the city they are in, or what happens next in their case. Because of this, a website needs to be built around the way potential clients actually search for help.

Good SEO comes from thinking about two things at the same time. The first is the potential client and what they are typing into Google when they need a lawyer. The second is the search engine algorithm and what it looks for when deciding which websites should appear at the top of the results. When a website clearly answers the questions people are searching for and has enough content that shows authority in criminal defense, search engines are much more likely to rank it higher.

After reviewing your website, there are a few major opportunities that could significantly improve visibility and bring in more leads.

One of the biggest opportunities is the number of SEO landing pages on the site. Right now the website mostly focuses on general service descriptions. While that explains what the firm does, it limits the ability to show up for the many specific searches people make when they need a criminal defense lawyer. This means the site is currently missing out on high intent searches that could turn into consultations.

Another opportunity is the lack of pages for specific charges. In criminal defense SEO, many potential clients search for help with the exact charge they are facing. Searches like DUI lawyer, domestic violence lawyer, drug possession lawyer, or assault defense lawyer are very common. Many successful criminal defense firms build pages around these charges because they match exactly what people search for when they need legal help.

The third opportunity is location targeting across California. The firm serves the entire state, but the website does not currently have pages targeting different cities and counties. Creating pages for major areas throughout California allows the site to appear when someone searches for a criminal defense lawyer in their specific location. Since the firm already serves clients statewide, this is a large opportunity to expand reach.

The goal of this report is to outline a strategy that helps the website appear in more searches made by people who are actively looking for a criminal defense lawyer. By building content that matches how potential clients search and what search engines want to see, the website can become a much stronger source of leads and new cases for the firm.

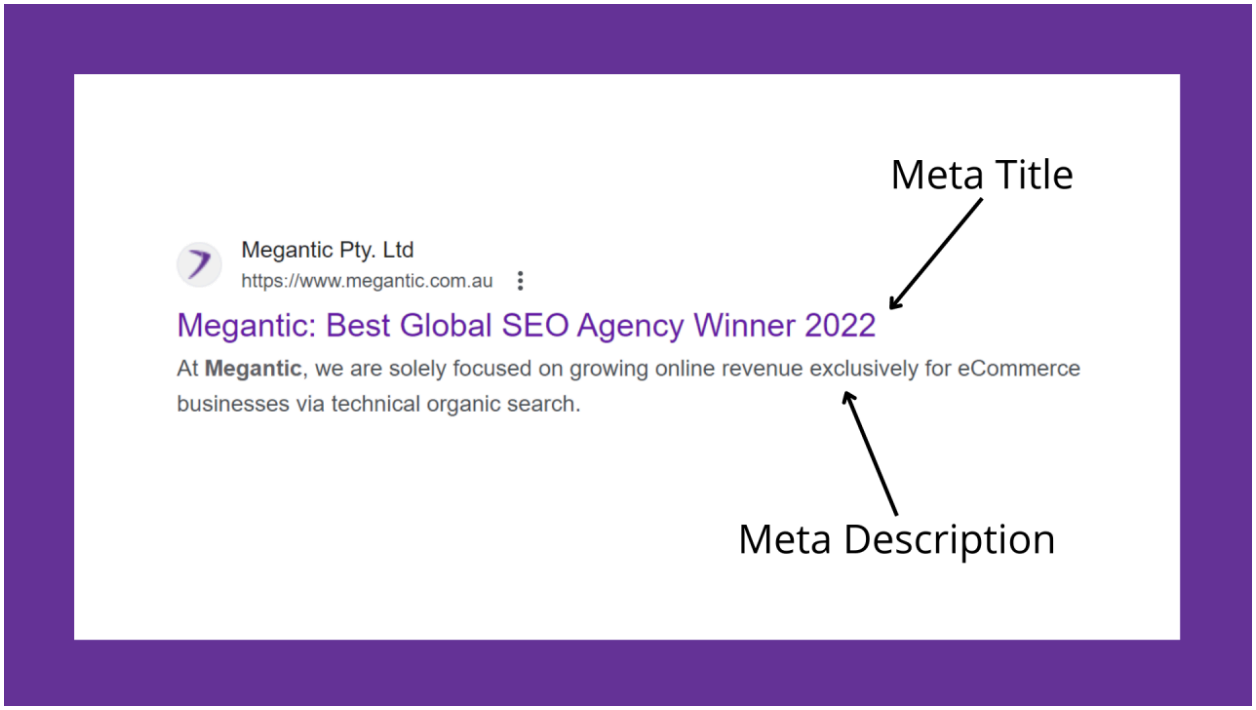
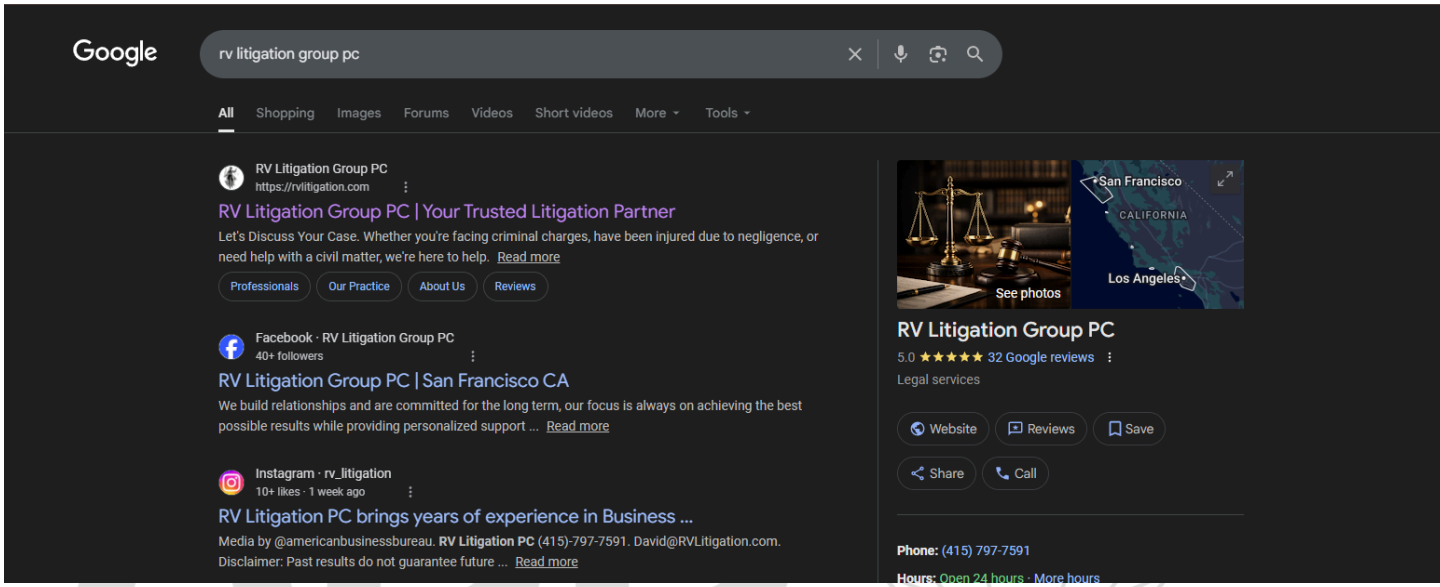
Take note of how often they say locations, and the type of cases they deal with. It may sound redundant but this is tailoring the website to be more SEO friendly.

- Notice almost all of them have separate pages for each type of case, the locations all have separate pages, the keywords that are constantly used.
- Take advantage of established backlinks. Incorporate instagram, facebook, etc.





Optimize the meta description and titles to be more oriented to what people are looking for.

Optimize the link URL slugs to use keywords that people will be more likely to search when looking for help.

Example, for the DUI page it could be

https://rvlitigation.com/DUI-lawyer-sanjose
Rather than the current link, https://rvlitigation.com/our-practice#criminal

IRL example of this (from the results found above):
